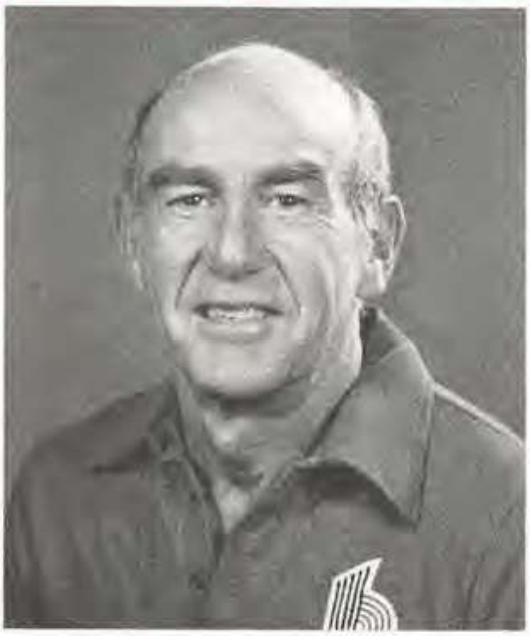
JACK RAMSAY



It has been noted with regularity in national publications that the Portland Trail Blazers of Jack Ramsay did not make the playoffs in 1982.

Now for some items which have not been noted with regularity:

1. That the Blazers have made the playoffs in five of Ramsay's six seasons as coach of the club.

2. That only three teams — Philadelphia, San Antonio and Los Angeles — made the playoffs in all six of those campaigns.

3. That dating back to Buffalo, Ramsay-coached clubs have made the playoffs in eight of the last nine seasons.

4. That no other NBA coach can make that statement.

Ramsay, starting his seventh season as Portland skipper, has directed 609 National Basketball Association victories — third-highest total in the history of the league.

Only Red Auerbach (938) and Red Holzman (696) have won more. Both are retired.

Among active coaches, Ramsay is No. 1, with Gene Shue (608 victories) and Dick Motta (584) his closest challengers.

In his six seasons with the Trail Blazers, Ramsay's clubs have won 276 and lost 215 for a winning percentage of .562.

In 14 NBA seasons — four with Philadelphia, four with Buffalo and six with Portland — Ramsay's teams have won 609 and lost 539.

And Ramsay, of course, led Portland to the NBA championship in 1977 and the best regular-season record in the league in 1977-78.

Ramsay joined the professional ranks after 11 seasons as coach of St. Joseph's College in Philadelphia. He won 76.5 per cent of his games with a record of 234 victories and 72 defeats.

A 1949 graduate of St. Joseph's, where he was team captain as a senior, Ramsay coached his alma mater from 1955-56 through 1965-66. In college, he led his clubs to 10 major post-season tournaments.

He is married and he and his wife, Jean, have three daughters and two sons.

Ramsay frequently has expressed a dislike for labels. So don't call him a physical fitness nut.

But there was Ramsay this past summer competing in a 32-mile swim-bike-run triathlon at Forest Grove near Portland.

"It's always intrigued me," he said. "This makes you feel good physically. There's a sense of satisfaction. You do it for yourself, just to see if you can do it."

There is Ramsay, working out in one way or another, every day of his life.

"Working out helps to relieve tension and other emotional states. Biking, swimming, running or lifting. I try to do at least two of these every day," he says. "When you feel good, you transmit this to others."

It's not surprising that Ramsay told sports writer Ken Wheeler of The Oregon Journal, "Physical fitness is absolutely critical for an athlete."

"An athlete can't possibly be satisfied with his performance if he's not physically fit," he said.

But Ramsay goes a step further.

"If the average person is physically fit, he's going to feel better, do his job better, communicate with people better," said Ramsay. "It's going to help in all ways. It's important that the average person eat right, exercises right and gets enough rest."

Ramsay doesn't think it's all that tough, either.

"An average person could maintain physical fitness if he just did the biking," he said. "Twelve minutes of that and a person would maintain fitness. You have to exercise either the arms or the legs."

"I think people don't realize, if you do it consistently, how easy it is and how much better you feel," he added.

A guy who wins and who leads a fitness campaign by example — that's Jack Ramsay, coach of the Portland Trail Blazers.

HARRY GLICKMAN

The year was 1948.

Harry Glickman, a young University of Oregon graduate, was assigned a desk in the sports department of The Oregonian, Portland's largest daily newspaper.

He started his sports writing career covering high schools, moved up to small colleges, finally wrote about the major schools of the old Pacific Coast Conference.

After covering the Portland Beavers of the Pacific Coast Baseball League, he became a columnist. And today his writings are respected from coast to coast.

It didn't happen.

Glickman WAS about to start a sports writing career, when a fellow with seniority returned from the armed forces to claim the job. There were no other openings.

So Glickman helped with dog track publicity, learned the ropes of promoting boxing, tried a bit of free lance writing and eventually turned to promotion.

It turned out quite well.

Harry Glickman today is respected from coast to coast in the sports world but as the Executive Vice President of the Portland Trail Blazers of the National Basketball Association.

Now if that fellow had not returned from service . . . who knows.

Glickman was the man most responsible for bringing the first major league franchise, the Trail Blazers, to the state of Oregon in 1970.

His success can be measured in many ways.

Let's just point to one. The Blazers will start the 1982-83 season hoping for their 228th consecutive sellout in regular-season and playoff action.

It's an all-time NBA record.

Glickman actually started looking for an NBA team in the 1950s.

But the prospects were not bright at the time and he wound up organizing the Portland Buckaroos of the old Western Hockey League. They were a smash hit, on the ice and at the box office.

In one nine-season stretch in the '60s, the Bucks finished first seven times and second twice. And they smashed every attendance record in professional hockey outside the then tightly-knit six-team National Hockey League.

Even before hockey, Glickman was no stranger to success in sports promotion.

In the 1950s and 1960s, Glickman made Portland the professional football exhibition capital of the nation — outside National Football League cities, of course.

Exhibitions in Portland drew an average of better than 25,000 a game in an era in which games in other cities frequently were in the 5,000 to 10,000 range.

Glickman promoted the Harlem Globetrotters, and they almost always sold out in Portland.

He was active in promoting post-World War II boxing when virtually every all-time attendance and gate record was set in the state of Oregon.

Glickman's background is all Oregon.

He was born in Portland where he played varsity basketball for Lincoln High School.

Even in his undergraduate days, he was sports publicity director at University of Oregon in the Cotton Bowl era of Norm Van Brocklin, still one of Glickman's closest friends.

Glickman and his wife, Joanne, have two daughters, Lynn and Jennifer, and a son, Marshall.

Heck, if that sports writer had not returned from service, you might be reading Glickman today — instead of reading about him.

STU INMAN

Starting his 13th season with the Portland Trail Blazers, General Manager Stu Inman can view with some authority the "yesterday and today" in the National Basketball Association.

"The first thing that jumps out at me is the coaching," says Inman, who coached San Jose State University from 1957 through 1966. "The difference is night and day."

"There was a time when I thought half the coaches in the NBA would starve if they had to coach in, for example, the Pacific-10," says Inman. "The level today is as good as there is in the world."

"You would talk to college coaches years ago," he says, "and they had no interest in the NBA."

"Today, they are calling you," he says. "And I'm talking about coaches who are prominent in college today."

Viewing the talent of today compared with years back, Inman admits, "That's a hard one for me."

"The players today certainly are bigger and more agile," he says. "A Mychal Thompson today could make a living as a small forward, a center or a power forward. I doubt if that could have happened years ago."

"And there is no question but that shooting skills have improved," Inman says.

"On the down side," he adds, "I'm not sure that players today are as fundamentally sound in all areas as they once were. Coaches are capable of teaching, but there is a constant battle against time, the absence of quality practice time."

"Organizationally," says Inman, "the league is so much more sophisticated now. Some of this comes through radio and television and all of the public relations programs."

"There is, however, so much we are still learning about the process of evaluation of players. We have learned to be comfortable with some things. Yet you still have one imperfect human being trying to evaluate another imperfect human being," says Inman.

"It's a very difficult job," he says. "We know some things about it. We don't know other things about it."

Inman has been responsible for Portland's drafting since he joined the club as a part-time scout in February of 1970 just after the Blazers were granted an NBA franchise.

His success can be measured by last season.

There were more Portland draft choices playing in the league — not all for the Blazers, obviously — than those of any other club.

It is typical, perhaps, that the Portland NBA champions of 1977 had eight draft choices, two free agents, one player acquired in a trade and only one outright purchase.

Inman certainly got off on the right foot in drafting.

His first choice for Portland in 1970 was Geoff Petrie of Princeton. And Petrie wound up sharing Rookie of the Year honors in the NBA with Dave Cowens of Boston.

Inman, a product of the San Francisco Bay area, is a 1950 graduate of San Jose State.

He was a 6-5 center.

And despite relatively low scores of the era, he still ranks as the school's all-time scoring champion.

(He bristles just a bit when reminded that he's still the school's all-time leader in personal fouls.)

He is a member of the school's Sports Hall of Fame.

Inman, besides coaching in high school and in college, is an old hand at international basketball clinics. He has conducted them virtually all over the world.

Inman and his wife, Elinor, have four daughters — Nancy, Sandy, Janice and Carol — and a son, David.

MORRIS (BUCKY) BUCKWALTER

As Morris (Bucky) Buckwalter recalls, it really wasn't so many years ago . . .

"You went and saw a player and saw that he was a good player that night," said the Portland Trail Blazers' assistant coach and top scout.

"You would ask the coach, 'Is he a good guy?' The coach would say, 'Yes.' And you would draft him," Buckwalter said, shaking his head.

Times have changed.

"Anyone you are looking at to draft in the early rounds," he says, "you have to look at four or five times to make sure what kind of a player you're getting. Off the basis of one or two games you could be fooled pretty easily."

And Buckwalter indicates the second step of modern scouting is almost as important as the first.

"We now do an awful lot of background investigation on the kid," he says. "We'll check all the way back into high school. What kind of student has he been? What about his family background? So many things."

Another modern change is the company a scout keeps.

"It's very rare to scout a college game alone anymore," says Buckwalter. "And there are some games where maybe half the NBA is represented."

What does Buckwalter look for in a prospect?

"Generally, centers must play defense and rebound. So do power forwards," says Buckwalter. "Guards must handle pressure well. Point guards must be good passers. Short forwards and big guards have got to be runners and good shooters."

"In general," he added, "I guess I look for quickness. It's relative according to position. But basketball is a game of quickness. Even centers have to have good reactions now. It's not enough just to be big."

The 1982-83 season was Buckwalter's first with more concentration on scouting than coaching.

"I thought it worked well," he said, "because I was able to maintain continuity with the team and that is important."

Buckwalter is an Oregon product and as a 6-2 forward won All State honors with the La Grande Tigers of the Blue Mountain Conference in 1952.

He was a varsity regular for three seasons at University of Utah where he led the team in scoring as a sophomore, won All Conference honors during his final two seasoins when Utah twice was eliminated by eventual national champion San Francisco with Bill Russell.

After serving as an assistant eight seasons at Utah, Buckwalter took over as head coach of Seattle University in 1967-68 and in five seasons posted a sparkling record of 79 victories and 49 defeats for a winning percentage of .617.

In the professional ranks, Buckwalter joined the Seattle SuperSonics as an assistant coach in 1972-73. When Tom Nissalke was fired in January of 1973, Buckwalter took over as head coach for the rest of the season.

In 1973-74 he was assistant general manager to Bill Russell with the SuperSonics.

And in 1974-75 he coached the Utah Stars in the American Basketball Association. That was the season when a youngster named Moses Malone turned professional with Utah.

Buckwalter also coached the Fresno Stars of the Western Basketball Association for a year before joining Portland as an assistant.

Buckwalter and his wife, Paula, live in east Multnomah county with a basketball-playing son, 6-5 Bryan, who attends Reynolds High School.

"I hope he keeps growing," says Buckwalter. "If we can't draft a center, maybe we can raise one."

JIM LYNAM

The writing of the St. Joseph's story continued in the National Basketball Association last season when Jim Lynam joined the Portland Trail Blazers as an assistant to Coach Jack Ramsay.

Ramsay played and coached at St. Joseph's.

Jack McKinney, skipper of the Indiana Pacers, played and coached at St. Joseph's.

Paul Westhead, coach of the Chicago Bulls, played and coached at the Philadelpia school.

And Lynam, of course, played and coached at St. Joseph's.

The Ramsay-Lynam relationship posed questions for Steve Duin, Oregonian writer who covers the Blazers.

How could Lynam accept an assistant's post after being head coach of a school that in three seasons won 65 and lost 28 and in 1981 posted one of basketball's biggest upsets with a victory over DePaul in the NCAA tournament?

Would Lynam be too close in style and thinking to the man for whom he played in college?

"I could not be more at ease in working with someone," said Lynam of assisting Ramsay.

"The fact that when I first started coaching I was under him and as a player I was exposed to success with him made it a natural process to take his style and philosophy and try to implement him," said Lynam, relating his college background to Ramsay.

"But you have to understand," said Lynam, "what the role of an assistant is. It's one where you make suggestions, not decisions."

Lynam continued this way:

"Jack has encouraged me to make suggestions. I don't have to wonder, 'Is it OK if I say this?' My ego won't be bruised if he doesn't agree with them.

"That's what you have to accept in the role of an assistant. I suggest and whether Jack agrees or disagrees is beside the point."

Lynam admits that something like the victory, as a head coach, over DePaul, was "an emotional high."

"But it was a one-time shot," he said.

"I like to look upon myself as being pretty even-tempered," said Lynam. "My highs and lows are kept to a minimum. When coaching is your livelihood, that becomes very important if you hope to be a survivor.

Lynam played guard for Ramsay from 1962 through 1964, scoring 1,012 points and twice being voted St. Joseph's most valuable player. In 1962-63 he shared the Most Valuable Player award in Philadelphia's Big Five, and he is a member of the Hall of Fame both at St. Joseph's and in the Big Five.

Lynam, who taught calculus at St. Joseph's, was a member of Ramsay's team that advanced to the final four of the NCAA championships before losing to an Ohio State team that included such future NBA stars as John Havlicek, Jerry Lucas and Larry Siegfried.

Before becoming head coach at St. Joseph's, Lynam won 23 and lost 29 in two seasons at Fairfield University and posted a 70-61 record at American University.

Lynam is married and he and his wife, Kaye, have two daughters, Kathleen and Denice, and a son, Jim Jr.

On joining the professional ranks, Lynam told writer John Strawn the different between college and pro coaching.

"I'll tell you what will be different," he said. "When you lose in college, you've got to walk around all week with everybody asking all the time what went wrong. You get tired of that."

"With the pace in the NBA," he said, "you won't have time to enjoy a win too long or suffer too much with a loss. I think I'll like that."

RON CULP

One thousand National Basketball Association games . . .

That's the milestone Portland trainer Ron Culp will hit this season, his 13th in the NBA and his 9th with the Trail Blazers.

At the end of the 1981-82 campaign he could look back on 984 games without a miss.

Changes in the NBA since Culp joined the league with the Cleveland Cavaliers in the fall of 1970?

"The greatest single change is the change in the athlete himself," says Culp. "Today's athlete is considerably more intelligent, more aware of himself physically and mentally. He is more sophisticated along the lines of caring for himself and his own physical well being."

"I think this had led to the general public being interested in good conditioning and physicial fitness, too," says Culp.

"Twelve years ago if you talked to someone about diet, you just got a blank expression," says Culp. "Now rookies ask me about having too much protein, or about food supplements. That just didn't happen 12 years ago."

"And coaches are so much more aware and intelligent about what used to be peripheral areas," says Culp. "Twelve years ago they would just tell athletes to eat a good meal. Now they are more concerned with the individual."

"There are very few of what I call soda and potato chip athletes any more," says Culp.

Culp regards his duties as a trainer as being primarily three-fold.

"The primary responsibility still is the physical well being of the athlete," he says. "The second responsibility involves team management — travel, practices, hotels."

"The third area is getting more into the psychological aspects of professional sports," says Culp. "And this can be tough because the life of a professional athlete is so open."

Culp is a 1968 graduate of Bowling Green State University. He earned a master's degree at the same school and has done graduate work in physical therapy at Case Western Reserve University.

Before joining the Cavaliers, where he was trainer for four seasons, Culp was head trainer at Baldwin-Wallace College in Ohio. And while in Cleveland, he also was trainer for the World Tennis team, the Cleveland Nets.

In the off-season in Portland, Culp has been trainer through four and one-half seasons for the Portland Timbers of the North American Soccer League.

And in November of 1981 he started operation of his own sporting goods store, Ron Culp's Training Room.

Culp relaxes mostly with outdoor sports such as bicycling and white water rafting and took up golf during the past summer.

Culp's wife, Marilyn, works for the district attorney's office in Portland and the couple has a daughter, Amanda.

Only five other trainers have been in the NBA since the fall of 1970 when Culp joined the league.

Joe O'Toole still is with Atlanta, Dick D'Olivia with Golden State, Al Domenico with Philadelphia and Joe Proski with Phoenix.

Jack Curran was with the Seattle SuperSonics in 1970-71 and now is with the Los Angeles Lakers.

MARKETING STAFF

JON SPOELSTRA

Vice President of Marketing of the Blazers is Jon Spoelstra. Since joining the club four years ago, the Blazers have brought both radio and television in-house, have developed a one-hour Blazer Sports Talk Show preceding each radio game broadcast, and have developed other various programming. The Blazers sell the advertising and handle production for these shows. Besides Blazer radio and television, Spoelstra's responsibilities include advertising and marketing of closed circuit productions. He is a University of Notre Dame graduate. He and his wife, Lisa, have a daughter, Monica, and son, Erik.

BERLYN HODGES

Marketing Manager of the Portland Trail Blazers for the third straight season is Berlyn Hodges, an original with the club. He is involved with selling of radio, television and program advertising, serves as liaison to radio and television during broadcasts, helps in selling of split feeds and in renting of video machines. Hodges formerly was vice president of the Portland Buckaroos' hockey team and for 11 seasons was the Buckaroos' trainer. He was a professional baseball pitcher and in leisure hours still is a crack golfer.

WALLY SCALES

Director of promotions with the Portland Trail Blazers is Wally Scales, who is in his 10th season with the club. Scales is involved in selling of identity packages, is in charge of the speakers' bureau, is involved in sale of novelties and other merchandise, serves as liaison with Team Shops and is in charge of in-house promotions at Memorial Coliseum. Scales was an all-city guard in his native St. Louis and attended Lincoln University and Citrus College. He and his wife, Brenda, have two children, Tamara and J.R.

GEORGE WASCH

The most highly-regarded director of television sports events in the Pacific Northwest is George Wasch. He is in his 29th year of TV production. In addition to directing all Blazer games on home closed circuit, which he has done the past five years, Wasch directs about 20 split feeds each season of games televised back to the visiting team's cities and he directs 20 Blazer road games that are shown on KPTV. Wasch also is involved in production and direction of other televised sports events in the Northwest to which Blazer broadcasting has obtained exclusive rights. Wasch and his wife, Patty, have three children, Mindy, Mike and Erin.

SUE MILLER

Media Manager for the Trail Blazers is Sue Miller. Her principal responsibilities are managing the broadcasting activities on the Blazers 23-station radio network. Additionally, she helps coordinate Blazer televised games and sponsor promotions, is chief liaison with radio network stations and keeps records of player appearances. She also coaches the blazer softball team.

PHILIPPE LAVIE

Philippe Lavie, account executive, joined the Trail Blazers in September of 1980 and now is in charge of Portland's closed-circuit television at the Paramount Theatre. He also is involved in sale of identity packages to advertisers and participates in general activities of the marketing department. Philippe is French born and has concluded his Master in Business Administration and Management in France.

ADMINISTRATION

GEORGE RICKLES

Vice president of administration for the Portland Trail Blazers is George Rickles. He is in charge of ticket sales and office operations and is the Blazers' chief liaison officer with Memorial Coliseum. Rickles is an original of the Trail Blazers, formerly serving as business manager, and is beginning his 13th season with the club. For 13 years he supervised ticket operations for the Portland Buckaroos of the Western Hockey League. Rickles, a top amateur chef and deep sea fisherman, has three sons, Norman and Steve, both Portland attorneys, and Jerry, with a local record store. His wife, Sharla, is a registered nurse.

PUBLIC RELATIONS

JOHN WHITE

Publicity director of the Portland Trail Blazers is John White, an original with the club and now in his 13th season. A 17-year newspaper reporter and former executive sports editor of Portland's Oregon Journal, White served 16 years as correspondent in Oregon for Sports Illustrated, plus four years as correspondent for Time and Fortune magazines. White and his wife, Shirley, have a son, Michael, serving aboard the aircraft carrier Coral Sea; a married daughter, Coleen; and a daughter, Cheri, who is assistant publicity director of the Trail Blazers.

CHERI WHITE

Assistant publicity director of the Trail Blazers is 20-year-old Cheri White, who started with the organization eight years ago when she was in grade school. She was then running statistics. Cheri and her father may form the only father-daughter publicity combination in professional sports. Cheri is a 1981 graduate of Grant High School in Portland and now attends Portland State University. During the summer of 1981 she handled press relations for the Davis Cup tennis matches in Portland.

JENNIFER GLICKMAN

Jennifer Glickman is only 17 years of age but is starting her third season in the publicity department of the Trail Blazers and her eighth season with the club. She started running statistics and pasting clippings in scrapbooks. Jennifer, daughter of Executive Vice President Harry Glickman, is a senior at Portland's Lincoln High School and plays tennis on the Multnomah Athletic Club team. She plans to enroll in a university in the fall of 1983.

KENNY CARR

Portland Coach Jack Ramsay seems to sum up 6-7 forward Kenny Carr pretty well by saying:

"I think he has his best playing years in front of him. He has always shown the potential to be an outstanding player, but has not realized it yet."

"Carr is good now," says Ramsay of the 230-pounder obtained from Detroit for a first-round draft choice. "But I think he can be better than that."

It's not that the 27-year-old North Carolina State product has been a bust.

In five National Basketball Association seasons with Los Angeles, Cleveland and Detroit, Carr has played an average of 23 minutes a game.

And he has averaged 10.9 points and 6.9 rebounds a contest while shooting a strong .496 from the floor.

But Carr came into the NBA in 1977 tagged as a potential superstar.

The sixth player drafted that year (by Los Angeles), Carr had averaged almost 21 points a game in three North Carolina State seasons.

And as a sophomore he had been the fifth-leading scorer in the nation with 26.6 points a contest.

Bothered by injuries, Carr did not play much in two seasons with Los Angeles. At Cleveland he hit his professional peak in 1980-81.

Then he slumped some last season, splitting the campaign between Cleveland and Detroit.

In 1980-81 with the Cavaliers, Carr averaged a career high 15.2 points a contest and shot a career high .511 from the floor.

And he ranked sixth in the NBA in rebounding with a 10.3 average that ranked him third among the league's forwards behind Boston's Larry Bird and Golden State's Larry Smith.

Check some of Carr's individual games during that '80-'81 season . . .

Thirty-one points and 17 rebounds against Denver . . . 25 points and 17 rebounds against Philadelphia . . . 28 points and 13 rebounds against New York . . . 26 points and 18 rebounds against Phoenix . . . 22 points and 14 rebounds against Boston . . .

Those are nice figures. The Blazers would love to embrace them.

In trading Carr to Portland, Detroit General Manager Jack McCloskey said he believed Carr had lost some confidence in his play.

"I don't agree with that at all," says Carr. "I haven't lost confidence in my game at all."

In commenting on the trade, Carr said, "I'm excited about it. I'm looking forward to playing in Portland. I know from my time in the league that it's a good town, that the fans are really behind the team."

Coach Ramsay says of Carr, "He gives us Kermit Washington potential. He is a strong rebounder and a player who defends well inside. He is a player who will score, will score more than Kermit."

General Manager Stu Inman says, "Carr is a very, very strong kid who has the better part of his game ahead of him. We like his age. He has been around the block. And we like his intelligence factor."

Personal notes . . . Carr and his wife, Adrianna, reside in Redondo Beach, Calif., and operate a shoe-importing business . . . they have a son, Cameron, and were expecting another child just before the start of the season . . . Carr, who played on the U.S. Olympic team that won the Gold Medal in 1976 in Montreal, has a brother who is an anesthesiologist in Miami and a sister who is a pharmacist in Los Angeles . . . Carr was an honor student at North Carolina State and is considering a political career when his basketball days are over. . . .

WAYNE COOPER

The Portland Trail Blazers hope to rebound to the playoffs this season.

And that's where Wayne Cooper comes in.

The 6-10 center, obtained with a first-round draft choice in the trade that sent Kelvin Ransey to Dallas, was the Mavericks' top rebounder last season with 7.2 a game and led the club in offensive rebounds with 200.

And he did this while averaging just 23.9 minutes a game.

Want a comparison? The Blazers' Mychal Thompson ranked fourth in rebounding in the National Basketball Association last season with 11.7 a game.

But newcomer Cooper beat him out on a basis of rebounds per minute played. Cooper averaged one rebound every 3.3 minutes and Thompson one rebound every 3.4 minutes.

"We could not find anything close to Cooper in the draft as far as our big man needs," said Portland Coach Jack Ramsay. "And that was our principal objective."

"In Cooper we are getting one of the best rebounders per minutes played in the league," said the coach. "And he is one of the best offensive rebounders in the league. Even with averaging 23-plus minutes a game, he had more offensive rebounds than men such as Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, Bob Lanier, Bill Cartwright and Darryl Dawkins."

"With the trades for Cooper and Kenny Carr," the coach added, "we've gone from one of the weaker to potentially one of the best rebounding clubs in the NBA."

Cooper, a 220-pounder who was 26 on September 16, says, "Rebounding and playing defense is my main concern and the reason Portland traded for me."

"I don't think I have any great individual talents that make me stand out," says Cooper. "I'm at my best as a team player. On defense, I can block shots and I can rebound. I can hit the 15-footer pretty well."

"I believe I play pretty good team defense," Cooper adds. "I have trouble with the big men like Moses Malone and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar but name me a center who doesn't. I'm at my best on a club that plays good team defense where I can cheat a little."

Cooper did more than rebound for Dallas last season. He led the club in blocked shots with 106, had 115 assists to match his total for his first three NBA seasons combined and averaged 9 points a game.

The figures are not staggering, but remember that Cooper was playing 23-plus minutes a contest.

Cooper, born in Georgia and a product of New Orleans University, played 30 or more minutes in 19 games with Dallas last season.

In those contests, he averaged 14.3 points and 11.7 rebounds. Those rebounding figures are in the NBA top 10 class.

Check some of his individual games . . .

He had 20 points and 16 rebounds in 38 minutes against Houston . . . 18 points and 16 rebounds in 44 minutes against Indiana . . . 18 points and 13 rebounds in 39 minutes against Golden State . . . 14 points and 17 rebounds in 34 minutes against Atlanta . . . 22 points and 11 rebounds in 38 minutes against New Jersey . . . 20 points and 11 rebounds in 36 minutes against Philadelphia . . .

Cooper was a second-round draft choice of Golden State in 1978 and has played four NBA seasons with the Warriors, the Utah Jazz and Dallas.

Cooper and his wife, Denise, were married in April of 1980.

"We love Cooper's age," said Portland General Manager of the new center. "He has been through enough that we know who he is."

With Cooper, Portland hopes to rebound back to the playoffs after missing in 1981-82 for the first time in six seasons.

PETUR GUDMUNDSSON

The rookie record of Petur Gudmundsson, the Portland Trail Blazers' 7-2 center from Iceland, is not going to dazzle anyone.

Summed up, the University of Washington product played in 68 games, averaged 12.4 minutes, 3.2 points and 2.7 rebounds a contest and shot a strong .500 from the field.

But there are a couple of things to check out about Gudmundsson.

First, even as a rookie he had his moments.

He scored 18 points and snared 11 rebounds in 30 minutes of one game against Utah . . . he had 12 points and 9 rebounds in 25 minutes against Chicago . . . he had 10 points and 12 rebounds in 26 minutes of one game against San Diego, scored 15 points and hauled in 11 rebounds in 34 minutes of another game against the Clippers.

Then there was improvement, especially in shooting accuracy.

In his first 25 games, Gudmundsson shot just .418 from the field on 23 of 55. In his final 43 games, he hit on 60 of 111 from the floor for .541 marksmanship.

In fact, Gudmundsson was perfect for the season against New York, Detroit and Milwaukee. So he took only five shots in those three games combined. He made them all.

And he shot .857 against Atlanta, .600 against Chicago, .591 against Utah, .556 against San Diego and .533 against Houston.

Then, in evaluating Gudmundsson's record as a rookie, you must consider his background.

He grew up in his native Iceland.

"There was not that much competition in Iceland when I was growing up," says Gudmundsson. "It's so much more important here (in America) to win. Plus, there were not too many big guys. I always had to play against little guys and they didn't push me too hard."

Gudmundsson next played at Washington. He was hot and cold — 37 points one night against California, 6 the next.

"I had just two years of high school compared with what everybody else got, and I wasn't developed physically."

Gudmundsson dropped out of Washington after his junior season and played in 1980-81 in Argentina.

The experience was good and bad.

"The refs were terrible," he says. "We really had no coaching. Crowds were small but sometimes violent. They wouldn't even start a game down there unless the military was standing by."

But Gudmundsson adds:

"I think the experience helped me as a player because I learned to get tough, to survive on my own for the first time in my life, to make my own decisions."

"Before, everybody made my decisions for me," he said. "I was always pushed ahead when maybe I shouldn't have been."

Gudmundsson added, in talking about Argentina, "Six months down there is enough."

Portland's assistant coach, Jim Lynam, who worked with Gudmundsson a great deal in practice last season, says, "He's a good passer with the potential to become great."

"His greatest attribute is his vision," says Lynam. "He sees everything. He is so good a passer he tends to be a little too fine, trying passes he shouldn't."

And Lynam sums up, "The potential is there, believe me."

Commenting after a game against Chicago last season, Mychal Thompson said of Gudmundsson, "I think he proved that he can play with the best big guys (Artis Gilmore, in this case) in the league. I have to practice against him every day. I know what I'm talking about."

Gudmundsson, himself, says:

"From what I have seen, I know I can play in this league. It's just going to take time."

MICHAEL HARPER

Michael Harper leads the National Basketball Association in scoring with 47 points a game and in rebounds with 32 a contest. . .

No, it hasn't happened.

And the odds are pretty good that the 6-10 forward from North Park College in Chicago won't reach these figures.

But if he continues to improve the way he did from his rookie to his sophomore professional season . . . well, anything's possible . . .

As a rookie in 1980-81, Harper averaged 2.7 points a game . . . last season that average more than doubled to 6.8 points a contest . . .

As a rookie, Harper averaged 1.7 rebounds a game . . . last season this average almost tripled to 5 a contest . . . and he finished with 339 to rank third on the Trail Blazers . . .

Harper's shooting accuracy really improved. He was .420 from the floor as a rookie and climbed to .497 last season.

And in his last 20 games, he hit on 49 of 88 from the floor for .557 marksmanship.

Harper had more than four times as many blocked shots last season as he had in 1980-81 . . . 85 to 20 . . .

He ranked second on the club and first in blocks per minutes played.

Harper also finished last season with 229 personal fouls. He had four fewer than Mychal Thompson's team-leading 233.

But Harper's 229 personals were whistled in 1,433 minutes of action. Thompson drew his 233 in 3,129 minutes on the floor.

"The second year in the league is even better than the first," said Harper while enjoying his improved campaign. "You move from the bottom of the bench closer to the top. It's more exciting. More people recognize you."

Looking toward the future, Harper says, "I have to work on my concentration and playing my game. I'm not really a power player, so I have to try to keep the guy guarding me tired."

Portland Coach Jack Ramsay had strong praise for Harper last season.

"You just don't give up on a player with the potential he has," said Ramsay. "He's intelligent, has a great attitude, is quick, can block shots and run the floor."

"Harper has great quickness for a player 6-10 and has a great step to the basket," said Ramsay. "It's just a matter of time for him to be a very good player."

"He's so tough around the basket," the coach adds. "He's a slasher. He's so lean his whole game is going sideways."

Harper last season averaged in double figures in scoring against five opponents — 15 points a game against Washington, 12 against Detroit, 10.6 against Phoenix and 10 against both Houston and Cleveland.

His best rebounding averages were 7.6 against Phoenix and 7.2 against Los Angeles.

Harper shot an incredible .846 against Houston, hitting on 11 of 13 from the floor. He was .750 against Phoenix, .650 against Dallas, .625 against Washington and an even .600 against Philadelphia.

He scored 20 points in 29 minutes in one game against Phoenix, hitting on 10 of 11 from the floor . . . he had 18 points and 10 rebounds in 31 minutes against San Antonio . . . 18 points and 8 rebounds in 32 minutes against Indiana . . . and 18 points in just 27 minutes in one game against Washington.

JEFF LAMP

Direct comparisons are dangerous, but there's the possibility that Jeff Lamp will become Jim Paxson this season.

If you need an explanation, let's put it this way:

As a rookie, without much playing time, Paxson, a first-round draft choice, averaged 6.2 points a game.

In his second season, with playing time, Paxson led the Trail Blazers in scoring with 17.1 points a contest.

Lamp, a first-round draft choice from Virginia, averaged just 11.4 minutes a game as a rookie and played in only 54 games. He posted a 4.6 scoring average.

But he showed promise.

In his last five games, Lamp scored 47 points in 74 minutes of action.

He scored 21 points (hitting on 9 of 10 from the floor) in one game against San Diego and he scored 14 points in just 25 minutes in another game against the Clippers.

He averaged 10 points a contest against Indiana, 9.6 against San Diego, 9.5 against Phoenix and an even 9 against Cleveland.

Lamp shot a solid .510 from the floor and in his last 18 games improved to a hot .566.

Against some opponents, Lamp was torrid — .800 against Indiana, .778 against Phoenix, .731 against San Diego, .684 against Dallas, .625 against Seattle and .615 against Golden State.

And as a rookie Lamp led Portland in free throw accuracy at .820 and was even better (.894) in his last 38 games.

His rookie season, without question, was a problem for Lamp, who had been the top scorer in Virginia history.

"I wish I could say I've gone through it without ever experiencing anger, bitterness, sarcasm or being upset," he told writer Ken Wheeler of The Oregon Journal. "But I can't. I've felt all of those things."

Commenting in February on playing time, Lamp said, "It's not a matter of fair or unfair. It's a job. It is a business. Jack's (Coach Ramsay) purpose is to put a team on the floor that he feels gives him the best chance of winning."

"It's not a situation I enjoy or one that comes easily," said Lamp.

"One of the hardest things," said Lamp, "is that I haven't been able to really feel a part of the team on the court.

"One of the greatest attractions in sports is the emotional highs you can reach. There is so much emotion in sport.

"What you feel, you tend to feel very strongly. There are very few things in life where you get to experience that much emotion in such a short period of time.

"Money is not the thing that motivates me. I have always been motivated by being able to compete, by being able to contribute, by being part of the team.

"Therefore, this has not been a very satisfactory reward for me. For me, that has made it very tough, and I don't think I've made it yet. I honestly hope I never do. I don't want to be content with the situation as it is now."

Lamp warned, "I know that when I come into camp next season (1982-83), I won't be the same player I am now. I won't allow that to happen. I won't allow it by the work I'll do this summer and the perspective I'll take into camp of playing and playing well."

Jack Ramsay's outlook on Lamp is brief and to the point:

"I'm not worried about Jeff Lamp. He's going to be OK. I'm convinced he's going to be a player in this league."

Lamp adds, "I think my future in the NBA probably is at guard. Right now I am a forward who can play guard. In five years I'll be a guard who can play forward."

It could happen even sooner.

CALVIN NATT

When Calvin Natt finished his second professional season, the 1980-81 campaign with the Portland Trail Blazers, his coach, Jack Ramsay, said:

"Calvin did not have a bad year. His stats were even commendable. But my assessment was that he was not as productive as I would have liked him to be."

It is not recorded whether or not Natt was listening.

But 1981-82 was quite a season for the 6-6 forward from Northeast Louisiana.

Natt averaged 17.7 points a game, up from 13.4 a year earlier.

He finished with 613 rebounds to top his total of 431 in 1980-81 and he finished with a bang, leading Portland in rebounding in eight of the club's last 11 games.

From the foul line, Natt shot .750, the best mark of his three professional seasons that started in New Jersey where he was a first-round draft choice in 1979.

And shooting accuracy?

In Natt's first two NBA seasons he shot a solid .488 from the floor.

Last season he boomed to an all-time club record of .576, breaking the mark of .569 set a season earlier by Kermit Washington.

His .576 ranked fifth in the National Basketball Association.

And in his last 25 games he hit on 162 of 259 from the field for a mark of .625 that over a full season would have ranked second in the league.

It's little wonder that Coach Ramsay said during the last campaign, "This year he reported in much better condition. From the first day of camp, he has been dynamite. He has been scoring inside against everybody. Consequently, we run more things through him. He's been terrific."

Natt, himself, comparing last season with his previous one, said:

"It's the difference between night and day as far as confidence goes. I worked on my shooting all summer. I worked to improve my legs. My confidence is the reason I'm making my shot more than some change in technique."

Natt called his 1980-81 season "a bad one."

"I was overweight," he said, "and I wasn't doing anything with the ball once I got it. When you get a couple of chances nd you don't do anything with them, they stop going to you. That hurt me. I'd get a shot and figure I'd better shoot because I might not get another one."

Natt believes that attitude — the right one — helped him get off to a good start last season.

"When I came to camp," he said, "I didn't think I had to prove anything to myself. But I felt I had to prove something to them. I think they had lost confidence in me. If I had come to camp with a no care attitude, I would have been gone."

Natt defines his talent this way:

"I'm not a finesse player. I never have been. I'm a physical player. You have to bang with those big guys. I had to start doing that when I was the starting center in high school and we won the state championship. The other centers were always bigger."

Natt could be playing more small forward than big forward this season, but he says, "It really doesn't matter to me. If I'm not as big as the other guy, I try to use my smarts, to block out."

"Besides," he adds, "the worst thing is to have a guy littler than you harrassing you all of the time."

Even in high school, Natt had an inkling about his career. I knew then that I could be a good ball player. In college, after about my sophomore year, I knew I could be an NBA player. But I didn't know if I'd get recognized."

And the future?

"It'll take at least another couple of years for me to peak," he says. "I'm still learning a lot of things."

The Trail Blazers love the outlook.

JIM PAXSON

When Kermit Washington retired early last season, the Portland Trail Blazers needed a new captain

The vote wasn't even close when players and coaches selected a third-season professional, Jim Paxson.

Paxson, himself, thought about it and said, "If someone had told me at the end of my first season that a year and a half later I'd be captain of the team, I would have had a little trouble believing it."

But teammate Darnell Valentine said, "Paxson represents a very stable force on our team. He makes so many things happen. He's a very complete player and he's the mainstay of our team."

"Jimmy is a thinker," said Coach Jack Ramsay. "He almost always has good suggestions, and he's another one of those players whose suggestions you'll take because he's investing something of himself."

"He'd be good anywhere, in any system," said Ramsay. "He plays hard. You'll never see him give up."

Paxson certainly led the Blazers by example.

In 1981-82 he was the only player to start all 82 games, and he scored in double figures in 80 of them — most consistent record on the club.

Paxson averaged a career high 18.9 points a game and in his last 36 games of the season scored 732 points for a 20.3 average.

He scored 20 or more points in 40 games.

As a rookie Paxson averaged 6.2 points a contest. He climbed to a team-leading 17.1 average in 1980-81, then climbed against last season.

(Paxson's record is similar to that of the great Walt Frazier of the New York Knicks, who started with a 9-point scoring average as a rookie, then moved up to 17.5 and 20.9.)

Paxson led Portland in steals with 129 and had 34 in his last 14 games. He snared a career record 221 rebounds. He shot a solid .526 from the floor and at the foul line was .767 after shooting .728 in his first two professional campaigns.

"He is a very efficient player," says Coach Ramsay. "His shooting percentage is high. He has a low rate of turnovers. He's high in assists. He gets some rebounds. He sets up plays. He moves the ball to people who are open."

And Paxson is innovative.

"He surprises me," says teammate Valentine. "Some of the shots he's able to make are incredible. He's always looking for ways to catch you off guard. Even in practice, he's looking for ways to invent his own plays."

"He just gets it done," said another teammate, Pete Verhoeven. "He can read the defense quicker than anyone else."

And talking about Paxson's running layups, Verhoeven said, "He's so smooth when he does it. If I did it, I'd trip over four guys. But he can do it with both hands."

"I'm not fast and I'm not quick," says Paxson in self-analysis. "Everyone in this league is looking for an edge. The edge I have is being aware. A lot of that is instinctive, from being around basketball my whole life."

Paxson's father, Jim Sr., played with Minneapolis and Cincinnati in the NBA seasons of 1956-57 and 1957-58.

Paxson last season averaged in double figures in scoring against every opponent except Philadelphia (9.5), with his best record of 25.4 points a game against Kansas City.

He also shot most accurately against the Kings — .684 on 52 of 76 — and was worst against the 76ers, .409 from the floor in two tests.

The most succinct comment about Paxson comes, perhaps, from ex-Blazer Dave Twardzik, now director of community relations for the club.

"Paxson," said Twardzik, "is exactly what Jack Ramsay wants all five players to be."

Guess that says it all.

MYCHAL THOMPSON

In a rare moment of off-court seriousness, Portland center Mychal Thompson said prior to the 1981-82 season:

"My main concern is I've got to average double figures in rebounds. Not just get double figures now and then. I have to average them."

Thompson was on target.

He last season snared 921 rebounds, highest Portland total since the 934 of Bill Walton in the championship season of 1976-77.

And he averaged 11.7 rebounds a contest, fourth-best record in the National Basketball Association.

But there was more.

Thompson was 17th in the NBA in scoring with 20.8 points a game, highest average by a Blazer since Sidney Wicks in 1974-75, and he was Portland's second-best playmaker with 319 assists.

A "triple threat" player in the NBA is one who stands out in scoring, rebounding and playmaking.

In combined points, rebounds and assists, Thompson last season ranked eighth in the league. Ranking behind him were Julius Erving of Philadelphia in ninth and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of Los Angeles in 10th.

In the process of compiling these records, Thompson averaged 39.6 minutes of playing time a season. That matches the all-time Portland record set in 1971-72 by Wicks.

So what does Portland Coach Jack Ramsay think about all of this?

"As good as Mychal is as a player," says Ramsay, "you get the feeling that with a little better concentration, he could be still better."

Tough guy to please!

Thompson, of course, was Portland's starting center last season, moving over for some playing time at forward.

"I would not want to be a power forward any more," says Thompson. "Not full time. I don't mind moving over there for some time during a game, but I want to be a center."

"Most of the guys I play against are bigger than me," he admits, "but I'm getting used to it, and it really works to my advantage. I'm quicker than most of them and I can beat them up and down the court. Quickness overcomes height most of the time."

Thompson is the only product of the Bahamas playing professional basketball and sometimes it shows.

"I'm just laid back and relaxed. Nothing bothers me," said the former star at University of Minnesota. "I'm not like everyone who's grown up in the United States. That's not me. In the Bahamas, we have the attitude that when things are bad, they have to get better. But in America when things go bad, it's the end of the world."

Would Thompson have been a better basketball player if he had grown up in the United States?

"No," he said, "I'd just be an angrier ball player, not a better one."

Thompson drew praise during the season from Portland's captain, Jim Paxson.

"This year he is leading by example, playing hard every night," said Paxson. "He's very much the team player. That shows something to the younger players. He's the leading scorer, but he gives up the ball, too."

Thompson last season led Portland in minutes played, field goals, field goals attempted, free throws attempted, offensive rebounds, defensive rebounds, total rebounds, blocked shots and points.

And he shot a career high .523 from the field and had a career high 69 steals.

It's only a beginning.

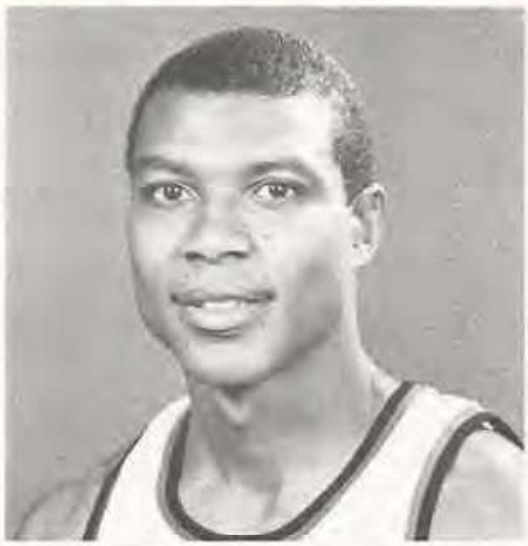
DARNELL VALENTINE



The trade that sent Kelvin Ransey to Dallas made the role of Darnell Valentine just a bit more critical with the Portland Trail Blazers.

At least to start the 1982-83 season, Valentine is regarded as the Blazers' starting lead guard, the guy who runs the offense.

"I look forward to the challenge," said the University of Kansas product, drafted by the Blazers in the first round in 1981. "I'm working very hard to fulfill that position."

At the time Valentine was, indeed, working very hard in the Los Angeles Summer League, exploding for 33 points in one game.

As a rookie with Portland, Valentine was one of only two Blazers — Jim Paxson was the other — to play in all 82 games.

He averaged 16.9 minutes, 6.4 points and 3.3 assists a contest and shot .413 from the floor and .760 from the foul line.

He was fourth on Portland in assists with 270 and third in steals with 94. But on the basis of minutes played, Valentine led the club in steals and was second in assists.

Valentine did not play as much in the second half of the season as the first. As a result, he scored in double figures 17 times in his first 35 games but only twice in his last 35 contests.

Valentine was not discouraged.

"As long as you keep your head up and be positive about the whole situation," he said, "the opportunities will come."

Portland Coach Jack Ramsay said of Valentine, "He's a fierce competitor. He never stops. There's a quality in him you see in most very good players. He's never going to be outplayed. He's not going to be intimidated."

Valentine joined the Blazers with the reputation of being a strong defensive player. He was not disappointing.

"He doesn't give you any breathing room," said Assistant Coach Bucky Buckwalter of Valentine. "He's so quick that he's right up at you before you can gain an advantage on him."

If anything really impressed Valentine as a rookie it was that NBA players play hard all the time.

"There may be three or four guys who don't," he said. "Three or four out of 200. And those guys don't last very long."

"As soon as that ball goes up," he said, "it gets real serious. Maybe it doesn't always look that way. Maybe that's because everyone doesn't get all frantic.

"That's because they are professionals. It may give the appearance of not giving all you can, but that's not the way it is. You give all you've got from the beginning of the game."

"Every night, everyone gives all he has," says Valentine. "Being human, there may be nights when a player doesn't feel well and he can't do everything the fans expect."

"But it's amazing how hard everyone works for the whole game," Valentine adds. "Maybe you can realize it only if you are out there to witness the number of times a guy gets hit, the number of times you run up and down the court, the number of times you give defensive help, run the back door."

Valentine points out that NBA games so often go to the wire.

"A lot of games are decided in the final two minutes but that's because the competitive level is so great," he says. "Teams try awfully hard earlier in the game to build a cushion, but the competitive level in the league is so great that a lot of times the game isn't won until the last two minutes."

In Valentine's top scoring game last season, he collected 20 points in 25 minutes against Atlanta.

The Blazers look for a lot more 20-point games in Valentine's future.

PETER VERHOEVEN

What were the odds on Peter Verhoeven playing basketball with the Portland Trail Blazers?

Well, Verhoeven, a 6-9 forward from Fresno State, was drafted in the fourth round in 1981.

And let's just say he's the first fourth-rounder in history to play for the Blazers.

Three players drafted below the fourth round made the club — Danny Anderson (6th) in 1974 and both Ron Knight (5th) and Claude English (7th) in 1970 when Portland was an expansion club.

As rookies, Anderson played 43 games, Knight 52 and English 18.

Verhoeven, as a rookie last season, played in 71 games, averaging 17 minutes a contest. And he started 23 games.

Verhoeven averaged 4.9 points and 3.6 rebounds a contest, but these figures really don't tell the story of his potential.

From November 29, 1981, through December 5 of that year, the Blazers played five games, four of them on the road.

In that stretch, Verhoeven played 181 minutes for an average of 36.2 a contest. He hit on 33 of 59 from the floor for .559 marksmanship. He had 31 rebounds for a 6.2 average. And he scored 82 points, an average of 16.5 a game.

What a record that would have been over a full season!

Then there was his Christmas night clash against the Seattle SuperSonics in Portland.

In 34 minutes of action, Verhoeven hit on 12 of 14 from the floor, was perfect at the foul line (4-4), snared 12 rebounds and scored 28 points.

And the rest of his rookie season?

Injuries hurt Verhoeven. But not as much, perhaps, as personal fouls. You can't score from the bench. And Verhoeven often went to the bench early.

He fouled out in 14 minutes against Boston, in 19 minutes against San Diego and in 21 minutes against Utah.

He drew five personal fouls in 19 minutes against New Jersey, in 18 minutes against Phoenix, in 18 minutes against Utah, and in 14 minutes against Seattle, in 14 minutes against Milwaukee and in just 9 minutes against Indiana.

"Pete had a fair chance to play a lot of minutes for us," said Coach Jack Ramsay. "He started for us for a long time."

"But game after game," said the coach, "the only statistic he was getting was personal fouls. We can't have that. We can't have unnecessary fouls."

"If I knew why I was fouling," said Verhoeven, "I'd quit."

Verhoeven averaged 13 points a game against Chicago, 9.5 against Philadelphia and 9.4 against Seattle.

His best rebounding averages were 6 a game against both Philadelphia and Seattle.

"My defense is my meal ticket in this league," said Verhoeven. "That and rebounding, getting the ball for my team."

"As long as I can rebound," he said, "I think I can have a spot on this team."

That and staying in the game.

Verhoeven, incidentally, hit on his last eight shots of the 1981-82 season.

It would be a nice way to start the 1982-83 campaign.

JEFF JUDKINS

Jeff Judkins, 6-6 forward-guard acquired from Detroit for a third-round draft choice, rates a catchy description from Portland General Manager Stu Inman.

"Jeff is a kind of poor man's John Havlicek," says Inman. "He is a great shooter. He's smart. He's a good passer. He may be a step slow."

"There's a battle in him, something of a Larry Steele in him," said Inman. "We don't project big minutes for him but he has an honest chance to make the ball club."

Judkins, 26, was drafted by the Boston Celtics in the second round in 1978 from University of Utah, where he had averaged 16.2 points a game over four seasons.

Utah won 63 games and lost only 19 with Judkins in the lineup.

As a rookie with Boston, Judkins was impressive.

He averaged 8.8 points a game while averaging 18.8 minutes a contest and shot .503 from the field and .815 from the foul line.

"He was good when times were bad," said K. C. Jones, assistant coach of the Celtics. "The thing that impressed me most was his improvement on defense as the season progressed."

In 1979-80, Boston acquired M. L. Carr, Gerald Henderson and Pete Maravich, and Judkins' playing time dropped to 10.4 minutes a game.

He averaged 5.4 points a contest but shot .504 from the floor and .816 from the foul line.

Judkins was selected by Dallas in the expansion draft in 1980 but signed as a free agent with the Utah Jazz where he played backup to the NBA's Rookie of the Year, Darrell Griffith.

He averaged 3.8 points a game and shot only .426 from the floor. But he was a torrid .882 at the foul line.

Last season was hardly a fair test for Judkins.

Signed by Detroit, he was bothered by injuries and played only 251 minutes in 30 games.

Overall in four NBA seasons, Judkins has averaged 5.8 points a game and has shot .480 from the floor and .809 from the foul line.

"We feel that Judkins can learn to play intelligently with the system of our team," says Inman.

"And you get a free throw on a technical foul with the game on the line," Inman added, "you would not be afraid to give the ball to him."

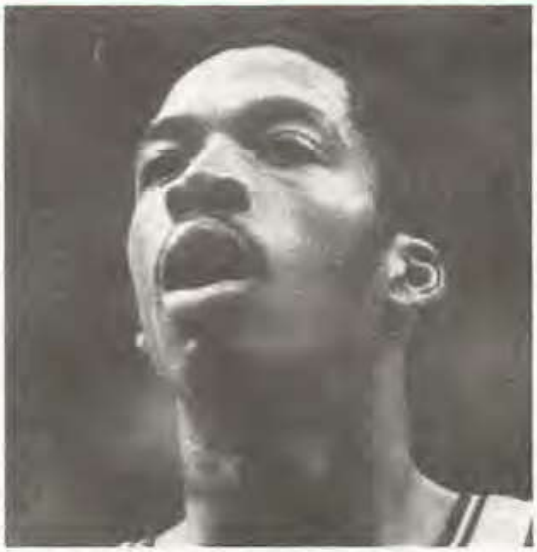
LAFAYETTE LEVER



Well, now, what are they saying about Lafayette Lever, the 6-3 Arizona State guard Portland drafted in the first round (11th selection) in 1982. . .

Portland General Manager Stu Inman says "A marvelous defender with fine leadership qualities. I am convinced he is better than Kelvin Ransey was when he came to us."

Blazer Coach Jack Ramsay says, "I think he will develop into a better lead guard than Ransey."

Portland Assistant Coach Bucky Buckwalter says, "Lever is the best lead guard to come out of college ball in several years."

OK, so Ramsay, Inman and Buckwalter all might be prejudiced since they drafted him.

Well, Ned Wulk, Lever's coach at Arizona State, says of the Blazers' top selection, "He is a good defensive player and does a good job of penetrating on offense. He has a wonderful temperament for a point guard, and it does take a special type of talent to be one."

And Wulk adds:

"He is not a hot dog at all. He doesn't do fancy ball handling for show. He doesn't talk a lot either. But he smiles a lot. He is a very pleasant kid, and I think he will be very popular along those lines in Portland."

Maybe Wulk is prejudiced, too.

Let's check in with former Trail Blazer Lionel Hollins.

"I've followed him since he started at Arizona State," says Hollins, "and I know he can really play. And he'll play the way Jack Ramsay wants him to play."

"I think he is the point guard," says Hollins, "they have been trying to draft for several years. Fat (Lever's nickname) will run the offense, run the break and play tough defense. he gets down and grits it out on defense."

Sure Hollins played at Arizona State and for the Blazers. But the Blazers did move him to Philadelphia.

Phoenix Coach John McLeod says of Lever, "He's a heckuva player. He's got great hands, great quickness, is a sound shooter and team player. I've watched him for four years and he's always been a steady, consistent player who uses his head. He's got good judgment and is a sound penetrator."

So McLeod lives in Phoenix. Let's try for another opinion.

Marty Blake, former coach and general manager who now runs a scouting service used by most teams in the league, says:

"Lever is really the only exciting point guard in the draft."

And what does Lever himself say?

"I should fit in with Portland's style," he says, "It's a team without a dominant superstar. I'll be filling a team role, and I think I play an excellent team game."

What prompts all the comment about Lever?

In 1981-82, Lever led Arizona State in scoring (16.3 points a game), assists, steals and minutes played and was second in rebounding.

He was named Arizona State's Most Valuable Player and best defensive player.

Lever led Arizona State in assists his last three seasons and in steals his last three seasons.

At the 1982 Aloha Classic in Honolulu, featuring 32 of the nation's leading seniors, lever was named to the five-man all-tournament team.

At Arizona State, one game stood out for Lever, a performance against Arizona on Feb. 20, 1982. In fact, his coach, Wulk, said the performance was "probably the greatest in the history of Arizona State basketball."

Lever set a school record with 38 points. He hit on 11 of 21 from the floor and 16 of 18 from the foul line (he was an .818 free throw shooter for the season). And he had 13 rebounds, 6 assists and 7 steals.

The Blazers hope history repeats in the National Basketball Association.

AUDIE NORRIS

There is nothing bashful about Audie Norris, 6-9 center-forward from Jackson State, drafted by Portland in 1982's second-round, the 37th player chosen overall.

"I'm elated," said Norris. "Being picked by Portland was totally unexpected. I know I can make it in the NBA. I'm very confident of it."

"I know Portland needs help on the boards," said Norris. "I think I am capable of helping out. I can go to the offensive boards and off the defensive boards I can hit the open man. I like to get everyone involved in the offense."

Jackson State Coach Paul Covington says of Norris, "He's a fine passer, a big guy who doesn't mind throwing it. He's a big rebounder with a great outlet pass. Tell you another thing. He can run and he'll beat the big man down the floor. He does have wheels. He also can play defense. A good man-to-man big man."

Portland General Manager Stu Inman is a bit more cautious. "Norris is a player who will be a project," he says. But Inman adds:

"If he makes it, we feel he will make it big in the NBA. He weighs between 240 and 250 pounds and he is a banger. If he makes it, he will make it as a big, banging rebounding forward."

ERIC SMITH

As the Portland Trail Blazers' 1982 training camp approached, Eric Smith was a survivor.

The 6-5 guard from Georgetown, a fourth-round drafft choice, survived both rookie camp and the Los Angeles Summer League to advance to the final cuts.

What was doing it?

"Eric is a very good athlete," says General Manager Stu Inman. "He really doesn't have his game together yet, but, coming from Georgetown, he is a winner."

"Smith is a little like Bob Gross in his unflappable approach to the game," said Inman. "He acts like he doesn't have a nerve in his body."

At Georgetown, Smith compiled a record that was solid but not wildly impressive.

As a senior, he shot .479 from the floor and .679 from the foul line. He averaged 9.5 points a game and had 116 assists and 75 steals.

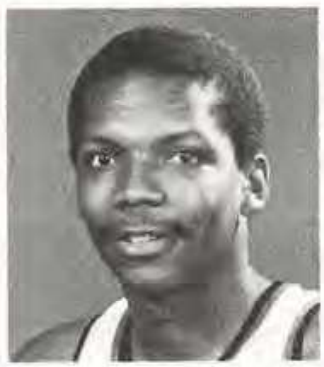
LINTON TOWNES



It seems a strange way to put it, but Linton Townes, 6-6 forward from James Madison, may be trying to play too perfect a game.

"Linton really grew on all of the coaches in the Los Angeles Summer League," said Portland General Manager Stu Inman. "He is a marvelous open court shooter. But he trys to play a perfect game, maybe to a fault."

It would appear that fall camp would be a time for loosening up for Townes, a second-round draft choice and the 33rd player selected in 1982.

Townes can switch from forward to guard but Inman now looks at him "almost exclusively as a small forward."

In four seasons at James Madison, Townes averaged 14.5 points a game and shot a strong .557 from the floor and .749 from the foul line.

As a senior, when James Madison won 24 and lost 6, Townes was the team's top scorer with 16.3 points a contest, shot .552 from the floor and .797 from the foul line and averaged 5.9 rebounds a game, second-best record on the club.

HENRY WEINHARD

Henry Weinhard
Brewmaster, No. 1, 5'10", 171 lbs.
Born: 1830, Wurtemburg, Germany
High School: Wurtemburg Area
College: Brewers apprentice

At the age of 22, and after years of apprenticeship, a talented Henry Weinhard decided he was ready for the major leagues. Upon surveying his options, Henry determined the best opportunity for a rookie such as him was in America.

In 1852 he came to the United States and immediately found a berth with the brewers in Cincinati, Ohio. He spent four years with this team polishing his skills.

As a free agent, he was intrigued by reports concerning bright openings on the Pacific coast. So early in 1856 he made the long voyage, via the isthmus, to the far west and hooked up with a Vancouver, Washington organization where he plied his trade for six months.

He then felt the time was right to make his move, so, in 1856, he established his own brewery near Fort Vancouver. It wasn't long before soldiers, loggers and trappers of the area became very big Henry Weinhard fans.

In 1860 he moved his operations to its present location on Burnside in Portland. From then on, Henry chalked up an enviable record of victories. He kept acquiring more equipment and adding more facilities to constantly increase his output while stubbornly maintaining the high level of excellence he had become known for. Everywhere along the coast Weinhard's beer was recognized as unsurpassed by any other native product.

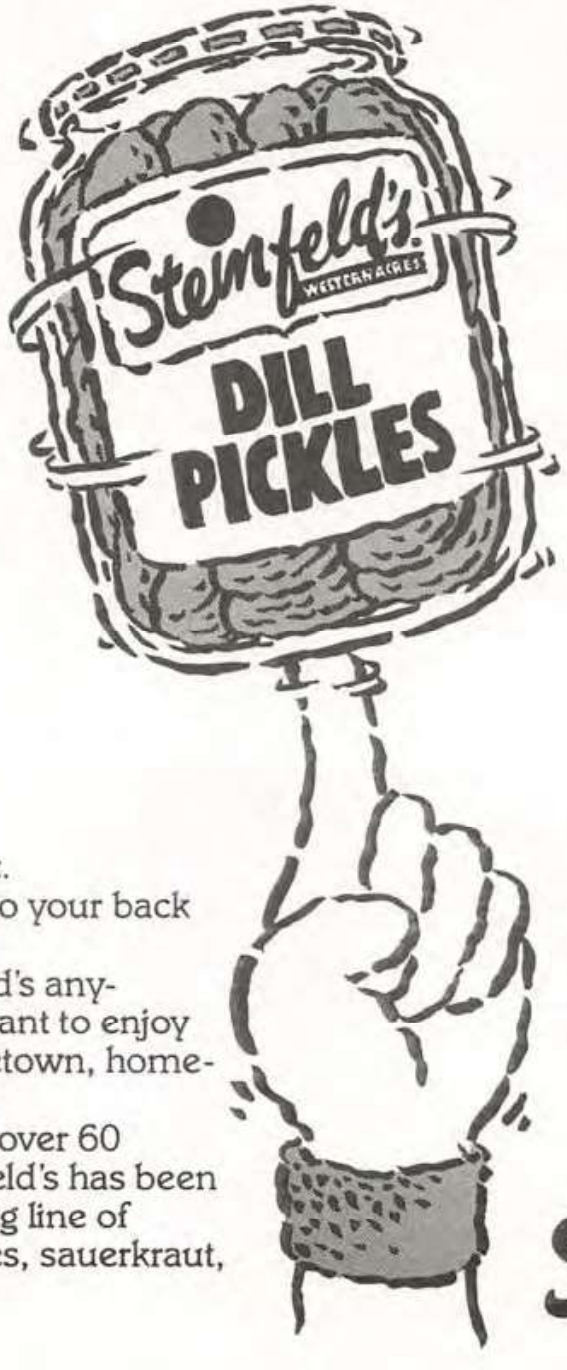
Henry's experience and foresight prompted him to locate in Portland because he realized this area would eventually become the primary source of premium brewing ingredients in the United States. Time has proven him right.

Rare, two-row malting barley, for example, is grown in very few areas of the country, but Oregon's Klamath Basin is the most prominent. And the unique Cascade hops — which Henry recognized as being equal if not superior to the exalted Hallertau hop of Bavaria are raised here in Oregon.

Today, two labels continue in the proud, teutonic tradition set forth by Henry Weinhard 124 years ago. The perennial hometown favorite, Blitz-Weinhard, and the handmade, ultra-premium that is his namesake, Henry Weinhard's Private Reserve.

Trailblazer fans can expect a lot of good things from both of them this season. Again.

TAKE STEINFELD'S TO COURT.



Or to a picnic.
Or even out to your back yard.
Take Steinfeld's anywhere you want to enjoy a great hometown, homegrown taste.
Because, for over 60 years, Steinfeld's has been making a long line of quality pickles, sauerkraut, and relish.

All with the taste, zest, and crunch that brings the fans to their feet.
And has made Steinfeld's the winning team.
But you be the judge.

PORTLAND ATTENDANCE

Portland ended its 1981-82 campaign with its 227th consecutive sellout in regular-season and playoff action in Memorial Coliseum.

This is an all-time National Basketball Association record.

The Trail Blazers were sold out for the entire season for the fifth straight time.

Official paid attendance is 12,666, which includes a limit of 300 reserved standing room tickets.

Final regular-season attendance for 1981-82 was 519,306.

Total regular-season attendance for Portland's first 490 games in 12 National Basketball Association seasons was 5,137,194 — an average of 10,484 a contest.

On the road last season the Blazers played before 426,790 fans in 41 games — an average of 10,410 a contest.

Closed-circuit telecasts at the Paramount Theatre of games last season drew 68,366 fans for an average of 1,667 a contest.

Average combined attendance at the Coliseum and the Paramount in 1981-82 was 14,333.

If The Cost Of Car Insurance Is Fast Breaking Your Budget, Turn To NATIONWIDE.

Throughout the West folks have learned how to slash their car insurance premium by $50, $60, up to $70 or more a year. They've switched to Nationwide, the world's second largest mutual auto insurer.

People buy direct from Nationwide by phone or mail. This helps lower sales costs and the savings are passed on to Nationwide's customers.

And Nationwide's is a "good-driver" plan. By insuring careful motorists who have fewer accidents, they're able to keep costs down.

Why not find out if you're eligible to save. Call the Nationwide office nearest you for a "no-obligation" rate quote. Call today!!

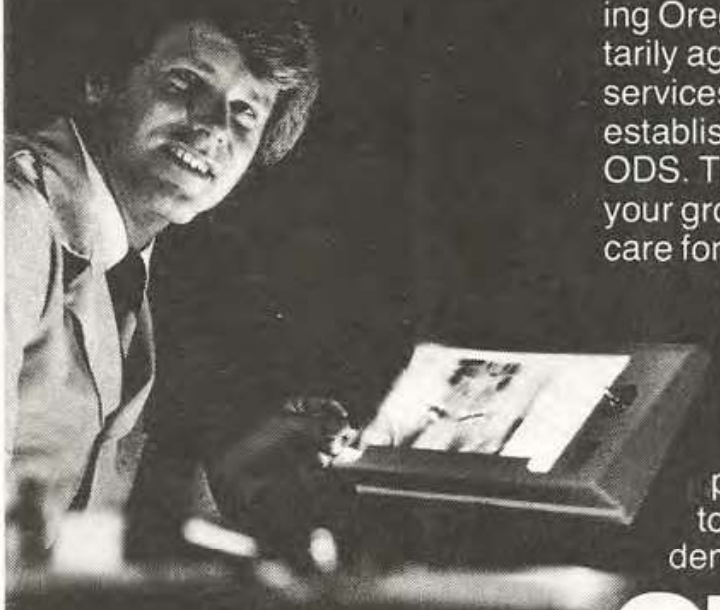
ODS is a dental plan with teeth in it.

Thanks to your dentist.

We've got to hand it to the Dentists in Oregon. Working as partners with ODS, they've been a big factor in establishing a dental plan that's easy for you to administer. Easy to understand. And of great value.



ODS eliminates time-consuming paperwork.
Because of ODS's unique working relationship with 95% of Oregon's Dentists, all paperwork is handled between ODS and the Dentist. That means no more headaches shuttling forms back and forth between Dentist's office, the insurance carrier and the plan administrator.
And what's more, since the patient spends less time unscrambling claims and dispensing forms, there's more time for the real business at hand.

Unique arrangement with 95% of Oregon's dentists provides "excellent value".
As part of the unique working relationship with ODS, participating Oregon Dentists have voluntarily agreed that dental fees for services will not exceed limits established in cooperation with ODS. The net effect being that your group gets more dental care for the dollar.

Save time, Save money, Act now.
If you want to establish a group dental plan or improve upon your present plan, call ODS today. We'll show you a dental plan with teeth in it.

RADIO/TELEVISION

BILL SCHONELY

Broadcasting Portland Trail Blazers' games, home and road, for the 13th straight season is Bill Schonely, an original with the club. In his first 11 seasons, Schonely missed only two games during regular-season or playoff action. He was suffering from walking pneumonia. He also missed the 1980 pre-season schedule while recovering from a heart attack suffered during the summer in Pendleton in the sagebrush country of eastern Oregon. His recovery was rapid, as befits a former U.S. marine. Schonely made the battle cry of "Rip City" — for a perfect basketball shot — famous in Portland. He came to the Rose City after seven years as sports director of KVI radio in Seattle. He also announced action for the Oakland Seals of the National Hockey League and the Seattle Pilots of the American Baseball League.

DAVE TWARDZIK

Director of Community Relations for the Portland Trail Blazers is former player Dave Twardzik, who also will be color commentator on the Trail Blazer radio network and the Paramount Theater. Twardzik, in his four seasons with Portland, shot .552 from the field, the fifth-best record among active players in the National Basketball Association. Twardzik, a 6-1 guard from Old Dominion, led Portland in assists in his last active season with 273 and averaged 8.5 points a game, just a shade below his career average of 9.5. Twardzik was drafted by Portland in 1972 in the second round but played four seasons with the Virginia Squires of the American Basketball Association before joining the Blazers. Twardzik attends many youth camps, conducts clinics and visits network radio stations.

TELEVISION

20 road games will be aired live on KPTV, Channel 12, this year. The televised games are indicated on the schedule below.

JIMMY JONES

For the 13th straight season, Jimmy Jones will handle play-by-play of Portland's 20 road games on KPTV, Channel 12. Jones doubles as public address announcer at the Trail Blazers' home games. A Shrine All Star game performer after his days as an all-city fullback at Portland's Grant High School, Jones also played three seasons at the University of Oregon. He has broadcast professional hockey and baseball and major college football and basketball — mingled in with track and field, boxing, motorcycle racing, golf, bowling, college wrestling and tennis. He is completing his 22nd year with KPTV.

LARRY STEELE

Serving as color commentator on road telecasts of Trail Blazers' games for the third straight season is Larry Steele, who played more games (610) for Portland than any other player. Steele, drafted in the third round from Kentucky in 1971, played both guard and forward for the Blazers until suffering a knee injury in Chicago in November of 1979. He never played again. Steele had a career average of 8.2 points a game, shooting .483 from the field and .796 from the foul line. He is the third-highest scorer in Portland history with 4,999 points, is second in assists with 1,719. He also is the all-time leader in personal fouls with 1,832, almost 600 more than any other Blazer, and in disqualifications because of personals with 45, more than twice the total of any other Portland player.

BLAZER SPORTS TALK RADIO SHOW

Starting 90 minutes before each Blazer game is Blazer Sports Talk hosted by Steve Jones. Blazer Sports Talk is aired on KEX in Portland and other radio stations throughout the state. A Special Edition of Blazer Sports Talk is aired on Mondays during the season.

STEVE JONES

Broadcasting producer of the Portland Trail Blazers is Steve Jones, former college and professional basketball star. Jones, former color commentator on CBS television, was the first Blazer color man to travel with the club. Jones' background is solid. He was a basketball star both at Portland's Franklin High School and at University of Oregon, where he twice was named Most Valuable Player. Jones played eight American Basketball Association seasons with seven different teams, finished his professional career in 1975-76 with the Trail Blazers.

THE PARAMOUNT

The Portland Trail Blazers will show a majority of 1982-83 home games on closed-circuit television at the Paramount Theatre, which has been remodeled extensively to provide vastly improved comfort for Blazer fans. In addition, the Blazers, for the first time, are leasing their own operations truck which George Wasch, director of television productions, says "will provide the best production in the country." Because of limited availability of the theatre, only 30 games will be shown at the Paramount. Twenty-nine have been scheduled firmly, while the 30th will be a wild card contest to be announced later. This will be the sixth season for closed-circuit telecasts at the Paramount. For the fourth straight season, Jimmy Hollister, KEX's talented "morning man," will host the closed-circuit telecasts.

KEX GIVES YOU THE BLAZERS...

AND A WHOLE LOT MORE!

At home or away, only 50,000 watt KEX gives you exclusive play-by-play Blazer action with Bill Schonely and Dave Twardzik. Tune in before each game for an inside look at the NBA with ex-Trail Blazer, Steve Jones. Listen to Jimmy Hollister and the KEX morning team, 6-10 a.m. for the KEX "Mystery Score" & win tickets to Blazer home games.

BUT KEX GIVES YOU MORE THAN THE BLAZERS!

KEX 1190 brings you award-winning news, in-depth sports with seven-time "Sportscaster of the Year," Darrell Aune, up-to-the-minute traffic reports with Dennis Nordin, spontaneous personalities and your favorite music.

PERSONALITY, NEWS, TRAFFIC, SPORTS, MUSIC...
WHERE IT COUNTS, KEX IS #1!

"THE PRICE IS RIGHT AND ITS REPUTATION IS GOLDEN."

--JEAN LINDAMOOD, CAR AND DRIVER, JULY 1982

Car and Driver magazine tested our '82 Chevrolet Caprice. Three different editors. One unanimous opinion:

"America's finest example of big car."—Larry Griffin

"Most European and Japanese drivers would marvel at this car's velvety ride."—Rich Ceppos

"The Caprice is the very essence of the fussless, imperturbable container that soaks up endless stretches of these United States . . ."—Larry Griffin

"If you'd like to know what America's carmakers have been up to . . . you owe it to yourself to drive an F41-equipped Caprice—or any Caprice for that matter."—Rich Ceppos

GM

Chevrolet Caprice. Another reason why Chevrolet, America's sales leader, is USA-1.

Let's get it together . . . buckle up.
